PART THREE

Part Three consists of a compilation of 1,368 useful business phrases presented in alphabetic order.

These phrases were selected from a study of the phrasing content of 1,500 business letters representing 50 types of businesses. In all, these letters contained 250,143 running words.

Phrases for common expressions are very helpful to the writer seeking to gain shorthand speed. However, they can be a handicap to him if he cannot write them without the slightest hesitation. If the writer must pause for even the smallest fraction of a second in composing or thinking of a phrase, that phrase becomes a speed handicap rather than a help.

If the writer cannot immediately think of the phrase for a combination of words, he will be well advised to write the words separately.

PART FOUR

Part Four contains abbreviations for 120 expressions. A suggested shorthand outline is given for each expression.

Some expressions are dictated and transcribed almost exclusively in abbreviated form, such as FOB (free on board). Others may be dictated and transcribed either in full or in the form of initials, such as AC for alternating current.

There are many variations in the use of periods and capitals in abbreviations. For example, the expression revolutions per minute may be expressed by rpm, or r.p.m., or RPM. In the following list of abbreviations, the forms used are those given in Webster's Seventh New Collegiate Dictionary.
